Download High-Logic FontCreator 14 Professional (32-bit / 64-bit)Â .Vitamin E is capable of enhancing the production of nitric oxide (NO) in the endothelial cells. This leads to enhanced norepinephrine- and serotonin-stimulated relaxation in the aorta. In a study involving healthy human subjects, we examined whether oral supplementation with vitamin E (tocopherol) enhanced the production of nitric oxide (NO) and its effect on vascular smooth muscle relaxation. In a randomized crossover design, 11 healthy volunteers completed 4 treatment trials in which they consumed 1) placebo, 2) 400 IU tocopherol per day for 14 days, 3) the highest tolerated dose of tocopherol (2000 IU/day), or 4) the highest tolerated dose of tocopherol (2000 IU/day) for 14 days and then the placebo for 14 days. Plasma tocopherol concentrations increased from 1.32 to 4.40 microg/mL after the high dose of tocopherol. No correlation was found between the absolute peak plasma tocopherol concentrations and the percent relaxation of the aorta. In contrast, the maximal aortic relaxation occurred earlier after a high-dose of tocopherol than after the placebo and low-dose of tocopherol (both relative to baseline) (16, 18, and 17 min, respectively, vs 30 min; p An assessment of neighborhood characteristics and cardiovascular mortality. Many investigators have noted a substantial amount of variability in the risk of cardiovascular disease (CVD) mortality across neighborhoods. Studies from the United States have reported associations between a poor neighborhood environment and elevated cardiovascular mortality, but few studies have been conducted in European countries. The goal of the present study was to estimate the influence of neighborhood socioeconomic and built environmental characteristics on the risk of cardiovascular disease mortality in Germany. Cross-sectional study. Geographic
